A Noble Incognito.

[T. C. Crawford in Chleago News.]
Two weeks ago there appeared at the Grand Union hold, Saratoga, a man whose appearance and dress attracted general attention. He was in the neighborhood of 50 years of age. He was slightly above the medium height, but was quite round-shouldered. His face was very angular and sallow. His hair was very thin and wel-dyed. It was brushed around from the back of his neck into long straight patches ir front of his cars, reaching nearly around to his small brown eyes, hidden under very bushy eyebrows. His ness was angular, thin, and very sharp and rod. His mouth thin, and very sharp and rod. His month was thin, and curved downward. His face was snooth-shavon on the chin and around the mouth. Long whiskers, as thin and shapehes: as a banch of withered grass, lung down from each skie of the face. The whiskers were dyed a royal purple black, which were faced out in patches, leaving a reddish purple gleam here and there. A white, soft hat or exquisitely line felt, with a black band, was were at all liness well subtled band, was were at all liness well subtled band, orn at all times well pulled down over in face. His linen was always white and of the best, as was shown by the huge collar and the flaring enffs that nearly con-ceoled his lith, weazened hands. His cravat was a black stock, covering his shirt boson down to his high-buttoned white waistcoat Upon the cravat he were a handsome opti.
His cont was a dark blue English walking coul of a very old-fashioned cut, with encounts pockets over his hips. His trouser were gray and wide, but were tightly strapped over a pair of patent-leather boots. During the greater part of the day when he went out to walk he would wear white cotten gloves a size or two too large.

He made no attempt to force his acquaint ance upon any one. He had declined to register when he came to the Grand Union, and, as he paid for his rooms one month it advance, his occentricity was respected. Some Philadelphia people one day noticed the old gentleman upon the porch. Engaging in conversation with him, they found him very fumiliar with English affairs, while at

One of the Philadelphians, a tall, portly One of the Philadelphians, a tall, portly man, with shoe-brush side wiskors, black eyes, a majestle port, and an enermously high bell crowned white hat, sauntored up to the effect and rande inquirtee about the Englishman. The Philadelphian was an exmayor, and had been in England while he was yet, in office. There he had received many attentions, and had learned to love a lord with the robust heartiness of an Englishman. He scented a lord in the peculiar stranger on the hotel plazza. The clerk could tell but nothing. The stranger had given no mane, but had paid in advance. He was some eccentric old gentleman, who evidently vished to remain unknown.

The ex mayor was certain that the mawas an English nobleman. Said he to his brends: "I think I remember his face. I am quite certain I have dined with him in London. It is just like him to desire to remain unknown here so as to be able to better understand our ways. We will keep a watch over hun and respect his wishes in this matter. It is important that we keep with him so as to give him the best possible opinion of Americans. You knowlunies we disagreeable New York or Chicago people,

But the news was too great to hold. The ex-mayor told the news about the hotel, and soon "Lord Castlerengh," as he was called bolded his back, was the centre of most marked attention Judge Hilton went up to him first and invited him to a broakfast at Woodlawn. Cas-thereugh looked very much surprised, but doclined. Thus Hilton went around the hotel enouncing the se-called English aristocracy They don't knew how to entertain people, road remaurant and fed me on pork ples and and Cheap. Come.

bitter beer,"

Hilton's snub only increased the popularity of Castlereagh. But when he declined all the invitations offered from every source, the respect for him rapidly rose to something like veneration. When he was in the dining-room, his old white hat on the hotel rack was regarded with almost sucred veneration.

The old goutleman drank wine freely at his ments, and always appeared to have plonty of money. As he asked for no favors and accepted none, any one would have been simply heated at for doubting his being a member of the English peerage.

One night when Castlereagh was out upon the front porch the warble of a real nightingule trill was heard. The English lord was greatly excited. He looked up and down the gryly lighted Broadway and almost shed tears of delight as then lighting alors notes grow sweeter and sweeter. He said "I beg your pardon," to the ex-mayor, "but I am passionately fond of two song of the nightingale. It is the first I have heard in

The ex-mayor explained that there were no native nightingales in this country. The song was probably from one that had escaped from its enge.
While all the speculation was going on the ladies came out from the parlor and the gou-tlemen from the lobbies, until the wide porch was filled. Then the song closed, and in its place was heard a rumbling chackle of a laugh as a black negro dwarf with enormous shoulders and a mouth like an entrance to a tomb, came out of the shade of the tree and, taking stand in the light, packered his huge lips to gether and began a series of trills and imits tions of the gayest of all the song-birds until the long pinza echoed with applicuse. "Come here," said Castlerengh, The dwarf advanced.

"Here is $5 for you. "Five pounds" said the dwarf,
"It is $25 in our money," said the ex-mayor, with offusion. there was at least a dozen millioraires. Wen they to be outdone by this lord in rewarding this dwarf who had so toyally assumed them: Then the crisp bills came out with an osten tations flourish. One loyalNew York broker saw Castlerengh's $25 and went $25 better. The bankers and brokers showed that they, too, could have as much contempt for money us may ford. There is no knowing how much the whistler got out of the crowd. He whistled and wittered in great excitement as the bills howered down upon him, showered down upon min.

Then he stepped back into the shadow of the tree and the nightingales song began again further off, and then fainter and fainter, until the dwarf had disappeared in

To a beggar at the door he gave $10, saying it was an old gambler's custom to insure his lack. The crowd with him imitated his example with, perhaps, not so much lavishness. He never awakened suspicion by asking may of his friends to play. He always went to the roulette table and played always for heavy stakes. One night he lost $10,000 without showing the alightest change of countemance. It was the same when he

Brown, and would answer to nothing else.

He was apparently the great friend of every street character. There was a street violinist who used to play love-sick airs near violinist who used to play love-sick airs near one of the rent porches where lovers used to walk, who received a good deal of attention from Casthereagh.

Then when he went out to walk he never failed to drop money in the box of an old woman who sat with a wheezy accordeen in her lap, chanding hymns in a gritty bass voice. The old lady was on a hill next to a hotel where ministers and religious people stayed.

"Safe, safe on the other shorp," grapable

the old woman, as the pennies from the plous rattle in her box.

Two days ago I met a man who knew Lord Castlereagh. His explanation of this peculiar character is very amusing. The man who told no about him is Arthur Gordon, an English detective, who was sent to Montreal in search of an escaped London forger. Mr. Gordon did not succeed in capturing his man. He came to Saratoga in trace of him. I first say Gordon when he came on and accepted Costledon when he came up and accessed Castle-reagh as if he had met an old acquaintance. The latter scenned to be very much confused, and apparently made some very tame replicate the chaffling inquiries put to him. Castle-reach at the time happened to be mone. They soon separated, and I overtook Gordon. I asked him if he knew the man with whom he had just been talking,

"Yes, I know him," was his roply,
"Who is her"

"Who does he say he is!"

"That is right. Thomas Brown, of London.

A very rum old chap, but very clover,"
"In what way is he so clever?"

After some persuasion, Mr. Gordon told Brown's story. Lord Castlereagh was the pres-Brown's story. Lord Castloreugh was the pres-ident of a joint stock company of street beg-gars and singers. "She! She is a character. I won't tell you how good she is. She is from Bristol, Eng-land. She is always placed near the religious people. PRIDAY EVENING, O. P. 5, 1884

B. K. HAMSHER, D. R. MOISSAL HAMSHER & MOSSELL Properties

Our Revolutionary centennial cel obrations are about over. But there is still left a chance for one- the anniversary of the disbandment of the patriot army of the Revolution. This will be observed with considerable ectat at Newbergh, N. Y., on the 13th inst. The occasion is to be made national in interest, so far as possible. President Arthur is expected to review a parade, and Senator Bayard and ox Secretary Evarts are to make speeches.

A very pleasant golden wedding anniversary was celebrated at Jack sonville on Wednesday evening, the "high contracting parties" being Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. King, who are known to many of our Decatur people. One of the notable features of the affair was the reading of a poetical effusion from ex-Governor Oglesby, who sent his regrets in that extra literary shape. Mr. and Mrs. King began their married life Oct. 3, track each, one being assessed at 1833, at Westfield, Mass., and have resided in Jacksonville since 1830.

The frost has acted very strangely this segson in some instances. For example, on Monday in Southern Wisconsin there was a frost that did i considerable damage to corn, in many cases destroying entire fields. In others a field on one side of a high way would be rained, and on the other side the damage would be very slight, if any. In still others it would cut a narrow swath diagonally across a field, where the stalks were chilled to the roots, while the remainder of the field would be as fresh and bright as might be. Considerable less has resulted, as a whole, but there is a very fair erop of corn in that great helt. One would have thought, to hear the outcry a few weeks ago, that there would not be a bushel

Ir is believed that Postmuster General Grosham will recommond the establishment of the postal telegraph and the postal savings bank system. The results of the work of the State Board of Elophzation are publighed to day. The railroad property equalized for assessment is valued at $59,162,102, and the assessment of other corporations in the State, as resend upon capital stock, is $2,218, 130. Of the latter amount Chicago furnishes over one half, thirteen cor porations in that city aggregating $1,201,500. East St. Louis comes next in importance, having five corporations assessed at $370,000. Quin cy follows with five corporations at $118,000; Rockford four, at $57,330; Springfield six, at $50,682; Streator four, at $11,678; and Pooria five, at $43,000. No other city in the state has more than two corporations, and the amounts do not in any instance exceed $30,000. The whole number of corporations assessed upon capital stock is eighty five. There are fifty-nine railroad companies in the state to furnish the aggregate assessment of $59,162,102, the total miles of main line owned and operated by them in the state being 7,893. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy is assessed the heaviest of any road in the state, $9,352, 325, and the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific ranks record, on an assess ment of $3,731,395, including the Havana, Rantoul & Eastern Narrow The Chicago & Alton is third in value, the assessment being $5,857,578. There are two reads which have only half a mile of main $12,865, and the other at only $1,880. Piftoon roads are assessed at amounts in excess of $1,000,000 each, and thirty others at less than $1,000,000 and exceeding $100,000 each.

The equalized assessment of real estate and personal property return ed by the county clerks of the state to the State Board of Equalization aggregates $156,531,202. Adding to this the total of the equalized as sessment of railroad property and empital stock of corporations, the aggregate value of property for taxation in Illinois is found to be $$17, 911,731; and as this is upon a basis of lifty por cont, of the real value, the taxable property of the state upon which returns were made for 1883 is in reality worth $1,635,829, 168. The wonderful wealth of Illinois is fairly demonstrated by these Good shoes, low prices: J. W. Baker The Jolly Girls.

It is stated that thirteen young ladies of Champaign have organized themselves into a society called "The Baker's Dozen." Their design in thus banding themselves together and holding secret meetings is what the boys, in their intense disgust can't find out, but would like to right well. It is alleged by a small boy, who pecked through a key hole, that the girls all wear calico dresses at these meetings and chew gum; that the president of the society sits in the middle of the floor, with her faithful satellities around her in an unbroken circle, each member with her knees drawn up to her chin and her arms clasped around them. A small piece of black court plaster is then selsimply pasted on the end of each nose and the eyes are focused upon it. This constitutes one of the (horrible) objects of the society. The first sister who looks away from her own plaster to see if her opposite is attending to business, buys the peanuts for the society. The meeting breaks up with a grand battle of pounut shucks. This feature is supposed to represent the aim of the society. If this isn't a truthful picture the small boy lies and the big boys must remain in anxious darkness regarding the sims and objects of the society until some fortunate revelation of the true state of affairs is youch-
